

SMILEE × BÖRJESSONS BIL

Börjessons' chat is open 40 hours a week. Car buyers browse all 168.

No redesign. These are borjessonsbil.se pages as they are today, with Smilee CarWebshop added. It answers buyers in Swedish in the evening and at the weekend, values their trade-in, books the test drive and hands a warm lead to the right site in the morning.

SCENE 1 · TODAY

A good chat, with office hours.

Börjessons already invests in chat: human “digital hosts” welcome visitors by name. But the chat is only open on weekdays from 09:00 to 17:00, an hour shorter than customer service. The buying guide asks buyers to get in touch for trade-in and financing, and the contact form promises a reply “within 24 hours”.

OPEN HOURS ON THE SITE

09–17	Chat, weekdays only
09–18	Customer service, weekdays
≤ 24 h	Reply to the contact form

The live widget: “Beatrice” welcomes visitors. Outside office hours, there’s nobody to answer.

A week has 168 hours. Börjessons' chat covers 40 of them.

SCENE 2 · SATURDAY 21:40

A buyer finds a car. Smilee closes the gap until Monday.

On the same homepage, Smilee answers in Swedish, values the trade-in, offers a test-drive slot at the nearest site and sends a qualified lead to that site's sales team. Today's digital hosts keep the daytime chat; Smilee covers the other 128 hours and the heavy lifting.

SCENE 3 · STEP 4 OF THE BUYING GUIDE

“Contact us: we help with trade-in, financing and the practicalities.” Now inside the chat.

Börjessons' own five-step guide sends buyers to a person at step 4. CarWebshop turns those three tasks into self-service flows, so the salesperson starts the conversation with the trade-in valued, the finance pre-checked and a test drive booked.

SCENE 4 · MONDAY 08:30

The weekend's buyers, waiting in the pipeline, sorted by site.

Every evening and weekend conversation becomes a lead with the car, trade-in and test-drive slot attached, routed to the right one of Börjessons' seven sites. Sales starts the week with booked appointments instead of a voicemail list.
