

PREPARED FOR DC THOMSON

Every subscriber, to the right place, first time.

A short proposal for one front door across DC Thomson's titles. It helps readers sort out simple things in seconds, day or night, and gives your team more time for the conversations that keep subscribers.

Three things we noticed as a subscriber

We looked at DC Thomson the way a reader does: someone whose paper didn't arrive, or who wants to change how they pay.

On dcthomson.co.uk, the subscriber action that's easiest to find is “Cancel”

There's no “Help” or “Manage my subscription” link in the main navigation, and the Contact box invites people to “discuss your requirements”, which is written for business enquiries. In the footer, the one subscriber action is a Cancellation Form.

Subscribers choose between four phone lines, with different hours

The right number depends on the title and the problem. When in doubt, people phone whichever number they find first.

Subscribers love you, and contact you about the same few things

The DC Thomson Shop scores 4.8/5 on Trustpilot. The negative reviews keep coming back to the same few topics, and most could be sorted in minutes with the right signpost:

Late or missing issues

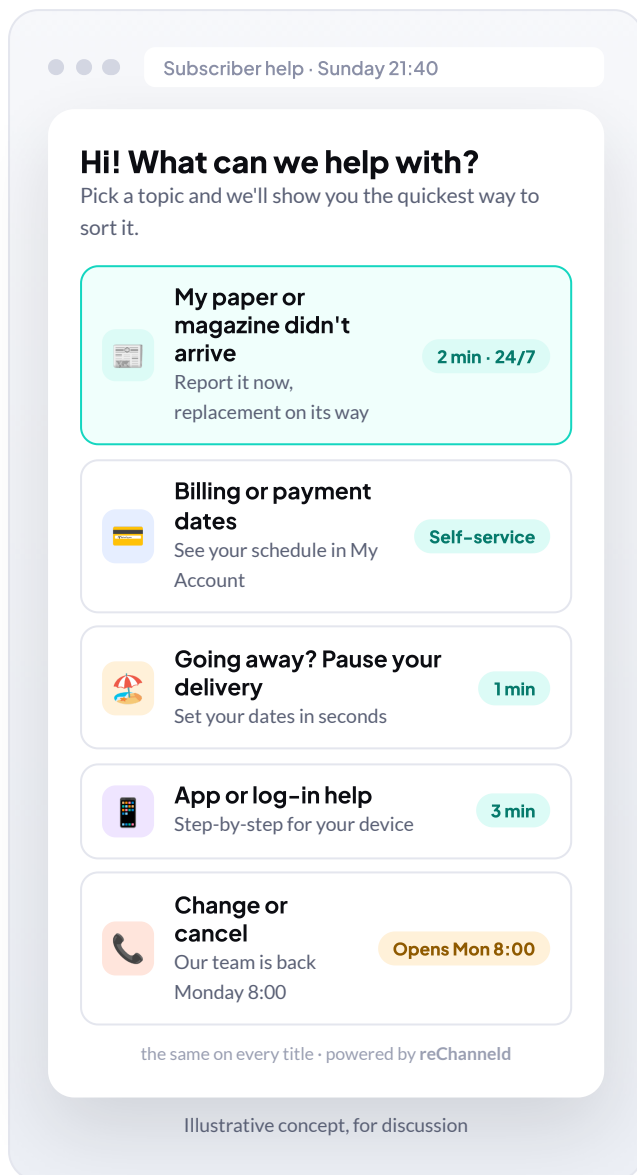

Monthly vs quarterly billing

Refunds

Early renewal reminders

None of this is about effort. Your team clearly cares. It's about signposting: the help exists, but subscribers aren't guided to it at the moment they need it.

One front door for every title

How it works

- One front door on each title's help page, app and e-mails. Readers pick their topic instead of guessing a number.
- The fastest route goes first: self-service, help article, form or the right team, with honest opening hours and wait times.
- Every channel stays open. We guide; we never block.
- Rules set by your CX team in a simple console, by title, topic, time of day and queue length.
- Live insight into which topics reach which channel, title by title.

A thought on cancellations

Cancelling should stay as easy as subscribing, and UK subscription rules point the same way. A front door can still offer the reader a pause, a switch to digital, or a quick chat next to the cancel option. Many readers who "cancel" only wanted a break.

Nothing to replace

It sits on top of your existing help centre, My Account and subscription management with Air Business. No new chatbot, CRM or IT project.

What changes

FOR SUBSCRIBERS

Sorted, any time

Missing issues and billing questions solved in minutes, including on evenings and Sundays.

FOR YOUR TEAM

Calls that matter

Fewer repeat calls, so more time for retention, complex cases and readers who need a person.

FOR THE BUSINESS

Fewer lost subscribers

Fewer frustrated subscribers means less avoidable churn on the subscription line.

A LOW-RISK WAY TO TRY IT

An 8-week pilot on one title

Start small, measure everything, and decide with your own data.

WEEKS 1–2

Map

We look at three months of contact reasons for one title, e.g. The Courier, and agree the routing rules with your CX team.

WEEKS 3–8

Guide

The front door goes live on that title's help pages. We test the wording on the top five topics.

WEEK 9

Decide

We compare call volumes, self-service use and out-of-hours help against the baseline, then you decide on other titles.

About reChanneld

reChanneld is channel-strategy software from Helsinki, Finland. It uses behavioural science, such as clear defaults, honest wait times and positive framing, to help customers choose the best channel for their need. Customer service teams set it up themselves, and it works alongside the systems they already use.

S-Bank in Finland (3.3 million customers, around a million interactions a year) uses reChanneld alongside its chatbot to guide customers to the right channel, 24/7.

79%

of contacts typically guided to the client's preferred channel

24/7

Next step

A 20-minute call to go through this with your customer experience or subscriptions lead. We'll bring a live demo and a draft set of routing rules for one of your titles.

Shall we take 20 minutes?

We'd love to hear how subscriber help works today, and where it hurts most.
