

RECHANNELD × DC THOMSON

Your website, exactly as it is. Plus one front door for subscribers.

We haven't redesigned anything. These are DC Thomson's own pages, with one reChanneld layer added. It greets subscribers, finds out what they need, and shows them the fastest way to get it done.

SCENE 1 · HOMEPAGE

A subscriber arrives. They now have somewhere to go.

Today the homepage serves advertisers, investors and job seekers, and nothing on it is for subscribers. reChanneld adds a small launcher that only speaks to readers. Nothing else on the page moves.

SCENE 2 · THE FRONT DOOR OPENS

Title, topic, fastest route. Honest about times.

The subscriber picks their title and topic. reChanneld puts the fastest option first and shows real opening hours and wait times, so nobody has to guess which of the four phone lines to call.

SCENE 3 · THE FOOTER

“Cancellation Form” stays exactly where it is. Now it comes with options.

When a subscriber clicks Cancellation Form, reChanneld first shows the alternatives they might prefer, and cancelling is still one click away. The Contact box gets the same treatment: subscribers and advertisers each go to the right place.

SCENE 4 · EVERY TITLE, EVERY SCREEN

The same front door on title sites and in apps. Live insight for your team.

Add the same layer to The Courier, Press and Journal or People's Friend sites and apps. Each title keeps its own design, and your CX team sees, title by title, where each topic ends up.
