

Libero Nordics: one brand, four markets.

How I would approach the first 90 days, in-market activation, launches and assortment for Libero across Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland.

HOW I READ THE ROLE

The link between brand direction and Nordic shelves.

The brand team sets where Libero is going. Four local commercial teams decide what happens in store and online on Monday morning. The Senior Brand Manager makes those two meet, and is accountable for the numbers when they do.

01

Own performance

Market share, brand activation, pricing and assortment in line with brand strategy.

SUCCESS LOOKS LIKE

One Nordic view of share, price and distribution, reviewed monthly with each market.

02

Plan & activate

Annual activation and business plans built with local markets and tracked against KPIs.

SUCCESS LOOKS LIKE

A shared activation calendar that sales can sell in, and that every market recognises as theirs.

03

Partner commercially

Aligned priorities with Sales and Customer Marketing, and better sales and marketing productivity.

SUCCESS LOOKS LIKE

Fewer, bigger activations, with toolboxes that customer teams actually use with retailers.

04

Launch & steer

Innovation launches from trade story to results, plus phase-in, phase-out and new opportunities.

SUCCESS LOOKS LIKE

Every launch has a clear tracking plan and agreed corrective actions before it goes live.

ONE BRAND, FOUR MARKETS

Same parents' needs. Different routes to the shelf.

Nordic families share a lot: long parental leave, daycare from around age one, an outdoor life in all weather. But grocery retail is concentrated differently in each country, so the activation that wins must be built with each market's key customers in mind.

Question to validate

Can two big customers carry a full Nordic launch, or do we phase it?

My first ask

A Nielsen deep-dive per market: share by segment, price index vs. competitors and private label, weighted distribution and the top-10 SKU contribution. That gives us one shared fact base before we change anything.

FIRST 90 DAYS

Listen first. Then plan together. Then deliver.

A brand manager who arrives with all the answers usually has the wrong ones. My plan is to earn trust in the four markets quickly, build one fact base, and show a first result within the quarter.

What I'll ask for

Access to Nielsen and sales data from day one, a store-visit buddy in each market, and 30 minutes a month with each country lead to review performance together.

ACTIVATION FRAMEWORK

Build the year around family moments, not just promotions.

Babies don't follow a retail calendar, but families do have shared Nordic moments. Anchoring a few big activations to them gives sales a strong story for customers, and gives the brand a reason to be talked about beyond price.

CONCEPT SKETCH · AUGUST–SEPTEMBER

Ready for daycare. Ready to explore.

Across the Nordics, many little ones start daycare in August. It is a big step for the child and an emotional one for parents. Libero can be the brand that makes the first weeks feel easier, with practical help and a smile.

INSIGHT TO VALIDATE

"I'm not worried about the nappy. I'm worried about whether my child is comfortable and happy when I'm not there."

1 In store

A "daycare start" shelf moment with key customers: pants for active toddlers, multipacks and wipes together, with a simple checklist on pack or shelf.

2 Daycare kit

A printable and digital "first week" checklist and name labels, co-created with Nordic daycare staff for credibility.

3 Social & content

Short, honest films of real first days in all four countries. Local voices, one shared look and feel.

4 Retail media & CRM

Target parents of children around one year old through retailer loyalty data and Libero's own channels.

BUSINESS GOAL

Grow share in the pants segment during the transition to daycare, when routines and brands are re-chosen.

HOW WE MEASURE

Value share in pants, sell-out uplift vs. baseline at participating customers, reach and engagement.

PILOT FIRST

Test with one customer in one market, read results, then scale to the Nordics the next year.

LAUNCH & ASSORTMENT PLAYBOOK

Launches that land, and a range that earns its space.

LAUNCH KPI

WHY IT MATTERS

Weighted distribution	Are we where shoppers buy? The first thing to fix if it is low.
Rate of sale	Do shoppers pick it when it is there? Tells us if the proposition works.
Repeat & incrementality	Are we growing the brand, or just moving sales between our own SKUs?
Value share & price index	Are we holding our price position vs. competitors and private label?

Assortment rules of thumb

- › Review the tail every year: SKUs that bring little profit and no strategic role make room for new ones
- › Plan phase-in and phase-out together, so we never leave a gap on shelf or a stock write-off
- › Keep a clear pack-price ladder per market, from trial packs to value packs
- › Use customer-specific ranges where they add sales, not complexity
- › Bring local insight back to the brand team for the next innovation and business case

WHY ME

I'm ready to bring brand, activation and partnership together for Liberio.

What I bring

- › 10+ years turning brand direction into campaigns, content and sales materials
- › Brand ownership: visual identity and consistency at Videobot and Leadoo
- › Multi-market work across operations in 11 countries at Management Events
- › Commercial mindset from running my own business since 2013

How I work

- › Start from the consumer and the numbers, then decide
- › Make plans concrete: owners, dates, targets
- › Keep sales, brand and creative partners on one page
- › Follow up honestly and correct course early

Where I'll grow fastest

- › Nielsen and FMCG category data: my first 30 days include a deep-dive
- › Nordic retail customers: learning them side by side with the sales teams
- › Swedish, Norwegian and Danish: I speak Finnish, English and Russian, and I'm keen to learn

› Innovate for Good

› Excel Together

› Be You with Us

Thank you for reading. I'd love to talk about how I could help Liberio grow across the Nordics.
